

“$8,000 Home Buyer’s Tax Credit”

JEFF TIPTON 480-216-9966
AIMEE BURRELL 480-216-2644

www.TheTiptonTeam.com

RE/MAX Power Realty
7529 S. Power Road #101
Queen Creek, AZ 85242

$8,000 Home Buyers Tax Credit: What We Currently Know

Posted By Jay Thompson On Thu. February 12, 2009, 12:19 pm @ 12:19 pm In Home Buyer Tax Credit, National News

Update: Saturday Feb 14 — here is an article with a chart highlighting the changes in the first time home buyers tax credit ^[1]. The Stimulus Bill was signed into law by the President on Feb 17.

Here is the general consensus on the $8000 home buyer tax credit so far:

- The $15,000 tax credit for home buyers that was in the Senate's version has been reduced to $8,000.
- The $8,000 tax credit will only be for first time home buyers (opinion seems mixed on whether that means you can't have owned a home for two, or three years).
- Unlike the already existing $7,500 first time home buyer "credit", the new $8,000 is a true tax credit – it does not have to be repaid.
- There is likely going to be an income cap. Make some level of income and the credit will either be phased out or eliminated. I've seen very little speculation on what that limit will be.
- Opinion seems to be split on whether or not the tax credit will be refundable, or can only be applied against your actual tax liability.

I stress "general consensus" because again, nothing has been finalized. Reports yesterday indicated a House vote was likely today. The mainstream media is now reporting a House vote is likely tomorrow (Friday Feb13) with a Senate vote over the weekend and the President signing Monday.

You'd think the House of Representatives would be discussing the stimulus package at this very moment. A quick check of C-Span Live though shows Representatives from Pennsylvania discussing the Pittsburgh Steelers Superbowl win. Yes, the House is debating at this moment in time whether to pass House Resolution 110 congratulating a football team. Whether to support "National Wear Red Day" is up next.

You can't make this stuff up.

Article printed from The Phoenix Real Estate Guy:
<http://www.phoenixrealestateguy.com>

URL to article: <http://www.phoenixrealestateguy.com/8000-home-buyers-tax-credit-what-we-currently-know/1912>

URLs in this post:

[1] here is an article with a chart highlighting the changes in the first time home buyers tax credit: <http://www.phoenixrealestateguy.com/home-buyer-tax-credit-information/1929>

[2] subscribe to the RSS feed: <http://www.phoenixrealestateguy.com/feed/>

Final Score: $8,000 for Homebuyers

NEW YORK (CNNMoney.com) -- There's a nice windfall for some homebuyers in the economic stimulus bill awaiting President Obama's signature on Tuesday. First-time buyers can claim a credit worth $8,000 - or 10% of the home's value, whichever is less - on their 2008 or 2009 taxes.

A big plus is that the credit is refundable, meaning tax filers see a refund of the full $8,000 even if their total tax bill - the amount of withholding they paid during the year plus anything extra they had to pony up when they filed their returns - was less than that amount. But there has been a lot of confusion over this provision. Adam Billings of Knoxville, Tenn. wrote to CNNMoney.com asking:

"I will qualify as a first-time home buyer, and I am currently set to get a small tax refund for 2008. Does that mean if I purchased now that I would get an extra $8,000 added on top of my current refund?"

The short answer? Yes, Billings would get back the $8,000 plus what he'd overpaid. The long answer? It depends. Here are three scenarios:

Scenario 1: Your final tax liability is normally $6,000. You've had taxes withheld from every paycheck and at the end of the year you've paid Uncle Sam $6,000. Since you've already paid him all you owe, you get the entire $8,000 tax credit as a refund check.

Scenario 2: Your final tax liability is $6,000, but you've overpaid by $1,000 through your payroll withholding. Normally you would get a $1,000 refund check. In this scenario, you get $9,000, the $8,000 credit plus the $1,000 you overpaid.

Scenario 3: Your final tax liability is $6,000, but you've underpaid through your payroll withholding by $1,000. Normally, you would have to write the IRS a $1,000 check. This time, the first $1,000 of the tax credit pays your bill, and you get the remaining $7,000 as a refund.

To qualify for the credit, the purchase must be made between Jan. 1, 2009 and Nov. 30, 2009. Buyers may not have owned a home for the past three years to qualify as "first time" buyer. They must also live in the house for at least three years, or they will be obligated to pay back the credit.

Additionally, there are income restrictions: To qualify, buyers must make less than $75,000 for singles or $150,000 for couples. (Higher-income buyers may receive a partial credit.)

Applying for the credit will be easy - or at least as easy as doing your income taxes. Just claim it on your return. No other forms or papers have to be filed. Taxpayers who have already completed their returns can file amended returns for 2008 to claim the credit.

Lukewarm reception

The housing industry is somewhat pleased with the result because the stimulus plan improves on the current $7,500 tax credit, which was passed in July and was more of a low-interest loan than an actual credit. But the industry was also disappointed that Congress did not go even further and adopt the Senate's proposal of a $15,000 non-refundable credit for all homebuyers.

"[The Senate version] would have done a lot more to turn around the housing market," said Bernard Markstein, an economist and director of forecasting for the National Association of Homebuilders (NAHB). "We have a lot of reports of people who would be coming off the fence because of it."

Even so, the $8,000 credit will bring an additional 300,000 new homebuyers into the market, according to estimates by Lawrence Yun, chief economist for the National Association of Realtors.

The credit could also create a domino effect, he said, because each first-time homebuyer sale will lead to two more trade-up transactions down the line. "I think there are many homeowners who would be trading-up but they have had no buyers for their own homes," Yun said.

Who won't benefit, according to Mark Goldman, a real estate lecturer at San Diego State University, are those first-time homebuyers struggling to come up with down payments. The credit does not help get them over that hurdle - they still have to close the sale before claiming the bonus.

One state, Missouri, is trying to get around that problem by creating a short-term loan on the tax credit of up to $6,750. The state would loan borrowers the money so they could use it at closing as part of the down payment. Then, when the buyers receive their tax credit from the IRS, they pay back the state. Other states may follow with similar programs, according to NAHB's Dietz.

Many may look at the tax credit as a discount on the home price, according to Yun. A $100,000 purchase effectively becomes a $92,000 one. That can reassure buyers apprehensive about purchasing and then watching prices continue falling, he added.

And it provides a nice nest egg for the often-difficult early years of homeownership, when unexpected repairs and expenses often crop up. Recipients could also use the money to buy new stuff for their home - a lawnmower, a rug, a sofa - and, in that way, help stimulate the economy.

CORRECTED: An earlier version of this story incorrectly stated how much taxpayers who were owed a refund would receive under the credit. ■

First Published: February 16, 2009: 5:38 PM ET

First-Time Home Buyer Tax Credit: 6 Things to Know

February 17, 2009 06:19 PM ET | Luke Mullins | Permanent Link |

While the proposed \$15,000 home-buyer tax credit died in negotiations between the House and the Senate, the $787 billion stimulus bill that President Barack Obama signed into law Tuesday includes a similar--albeit smaller--measure designed to help revive the real estate market. Here are six things you need to know about the freshly-enacted $8,000 first-time home buyer tax credit.

1. Eight grand, new buyers: The tax credit

Included in the economic stimulus legislation is much narrower than the \$15,000 proposal. This credit is equivalent to 10 percent of the purchase price of the home--although it's capped at $8,000--and applies only to first-time home buyers and principal residences. But unlike an earlier $7,500 home buyer tax credit, this one does not have to be repaid.

2. First time buyers defined: For the purpose of this legislation, a "first-time home buyer" is someone who hasn't owned a principal residence for three years before buying a house. (The date of purchase is considered the day that the title is transferred.) That means if you've owned a vacation home--but not a principal residence--within the past three years, you would still qualify for the credit.

3. 2009 buyers only: Only those who purchase a home on or after January 1 and before December 1, 2009 are eligible for the credit. Anyone who bought a home last year won't be able to take advantage of it.

4. Income limits: The tax credit is subject to income limitations. Single buyers need a modified adjusted gross income of $75,000 or less to qualify for the full credit, that's $150,000 for married couples. Those earning more than these thresholds may be eligible for reduced credits.

5. Refundable: Because the tax credit is "refundable," qualified buyers can take advantage of it even if they don't have much tax liability.

6. Recapture: Buyers have to own the home for at least three years in order to capitalize on the credit. If they sell the home before then, they will have to return the credit to the government. (Exceptions will be made in certain cases, such as death or divorce.)